Jazzy Singh emigrated from India to the United States at eight years old. When he arrived, he spoke no English. Within the next 17 years, Mr. Singh not only learned English and his way in a new nation, but had a highly successful career in IT and software development, rising meteorically within his field.

Life and career seemed to be on track, as he continued to expand, acquiring several health retail stores and other commercial ventures. Everything changed, however, when he heard news that a family member back in India had died from having been administered adulterated pharmaceuticals.

Adulterated pharmaceuticals are a problem on a global scale. Produced in poor manufacturing conditions and often failing to include needed elements (or containing toxic substitutions), at best, adulterated drugs are non-effective; at worst, they are lethal. Hearing of his relative’s death, Mr. Singh turned his attention to the problem of adulterated drugs in India. He sold his businesses in the United States and purchased two manufacturing plants in India where he produces high-quality pharmaceuticals at reasonable prices for India’s poorest classes.

In 2012, Globus Relief partnered with Mr. Singh to obtain worldwide distribution rights for generic pharmaceuticals. Since that date, Globus has sent shipments – some large enough to fill international shipping containers – to partners around the world. Globus can supply any generic pharmaceutical needed, from broad-spectrum antibiotics to cancer and chronic care drugs, on demand to its partners.

One recent shipment (pictured, right) went to Chad, Turkey and Sudan. Others have gone to Yemen, Zambia and beyond. Through this partnership, Mr. Singh’s mission to promote unadulterated pharmaceuticals for the poor has aided far more than his native India; it has aided and blessed the world.
