3.5 MILLION REFUGEES
Various Areas, Turkey

3.5 million. More than the population of the entire country of Uruguay. That’s the number of Syrian refugees hosted today in Turkey, the single biggest refugee country in the world. It's been eight years since civil war broke out in Syria. As a result of that war, half of Syria’s citizens have fled their homes. Of those, 3.5 million have ended up in Turkey. There they have married and borne children. They have set up shops, found odd jobs to get by and worked without legal permits. They depend on promises made by Turkey, the EU and world to give them aid, education and healthcare. And Turkey, heroically, has responded, as its economy and populace have groaned with the effort.

As a group, and because of the size and severity of the crisis, Syrian refugees in Turkey are one of the largest recipients of aid from Globus Relief in recent years. Working through Islamic Relief USA and ANSA-GIAD, a local Turkish NGO, Globus has sent hundreds of pallets of medical supplies to Turkey to alleviate the strain of the ongoing refugee crisis. Alongside the Turkish government, ANSA-GIAD has distributed these resources to a variety of recipients and programs throughout the country, including:

• Urban refugee centers: focusing on the urban centers where the majority of Turkey's refugees live, this program distributes medicines, food and wellness items to needy families

• Local hospitals and primary care facilities: ANSA-GIAD supplies medical resources to Turkish medical facilities in refugee-heavy areas to help alleviate the pressures and cost burden of providing free healthcare to refugees

• Syrian refugee camps in Turkey: this program addresses medical product shortages within refugee camps near the Syrian border

All told, ANSA-GIAD estimates that in the past year these programs have benefited 14 hospitals and medical centers, 7 refugee camp clinics and over 400,000 individuals, including 18,000 urban refugee families. Granted, it's not quite 3.5 million – but with the help of Islamic Relief USA, ANSA-GIAD and the Turkish government, we are starting to get closer.
